West Virginia Emergency Management Division Releases Damage Survey to Assess Flood Impacts

As severe weather continues to strike our region, the West Virginia Emergency Management Division urges those affected to fill out the official disaster damage survey.

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Following a significant amount of rain over the weekend, the West Virginia Emergency Management Division has reopened the disaster damage survey to assess damage following severe flooding and storms.

This survey is used for the agency to assess for critical damages as the result of a disaster. With increased flooding over the region, WVEMD is urging those affected to complete the Survey123.

Who Should Complete this Survey:

Anyone who has sustained damages following the severe flash flooding and storms over the weekend. Individuals and households, businesses, and local and county governments are all encouraged to submit the damage via the survey.

Where To Fill Out Survey:

It is crucial to note that this survey is NOT an application for any immediate or financial assistance. This survey is strictly to allow state officials to track and report damages..

As always, dial 911 for immediate emergencies, or contact your local emergency management for additional support.

For easy access, the Survey123 is linked on all of the West Virginia Emergency Management Official social media.
